The Battle of Tippecanoe U.S. Army Command and General Staff College

This book investigates the Tippecanoe campaign and battle conducted in 1811 between the United States military forces under the command of General William Henry Harrison and an Indian confederacy based at Tippecanoe. The book identifies and describes important relationships and treaties between the United States and Indians in the American northwest during the late eighteenth-and early nineteenth-century. The work details the actions in Harrison's Tippecanoe campaign in the fall of 1811. United States and woodland Indian military doctrine, tactics, and organization that apply to Tippecanoe are described. The study also describes key battlefield activities of the Tippecanoe battle on 7 November 1811.
